MARK SCHEME

Maximum Mark: 40

Published

This mark scheme is published as an aid to teachers and candidates, to indicate the requirements of the examination. It shows the basis on which Examiners were instructed to award marks. It does not indicate the details of the discussions that took place at an Examiners' meeting before marking began, which would have considered the acceptability of alternative answers.

Mark schemes should be read in conjunction with the question paper and the Principal Examiner Report for Teachers.

Cambridge will not enter into discussions about these mark schemes.

Cambridge is publishing the mark schemes for the May/June 2017 series for most Cambridge IGCSE[®], Cambridge International A and AS Level and Cambridge Pre-U components, and some Cambridge O Level components.

The statement is that, as well as an appropriate level of intellectual intelligence (IQ), effective managers should have and develop an appropriate level of emotional intelligence (EI). This is the theory of multiple intelligences and emotional intelligence is said to be the ability to understand and manage your own emotions and those of the people you work with and manage, and so achieve better business performance. Goleman developed the notion of emotional intelligence competencies: self-awareness, self-management, social awareness, and social skills. With these, managers are more likely to have self-confidence, a more realistic awareness of employee characteristics and needs, recover more quickly from stress, manage stress better, develop self-control, become more sensitive and empathetic, negotiate and lead with a more emotionally stable behaviour. The idea that 'soft is hard' for the practice of effective management. Consider the tasks and situations a senior business manager needs to manage and the value of a measure of emotional intelligence may seem obvious. Are some more traditional attributes/characteristics of managers more important than emotional intelligence, e.g. resoluteness, determination – in the short-term aggressive 'bullying' managers can be very effective – and not all employees want 'soft' managers. Look for evaluative comment. Credit answers that link EI with anti Taylor views and support motivational theorists who focus on issues like Emotional Intelligence. | Level | Description | Marks | 5 | Effective evaluation of the statement that senior managers must have a high level of emotional intelligence to be effective. | 17–20 | 4 | Good analysis and limited evaluation of the statement that senior managers must have a high level of emotional intelligence to be effective. | 13–16 | 3 | Analysis of the statement that senior managers must have a high level of emotional intelligence to be effective. | 11–12 | 2 | Limited analysis of emotional intelligence with possibly some application to senior managers. | 5–10 | 1 | Understanding of emotional intelligence / senior managers. | 1–4 | 0 | No creditable content | 0 | 20 |
